Porky Pig awakened with the first light of dawn. This was the Big Day, for which he and Petunia had been waiting and waiting.

They were going deep-sea fishing on the big fishing barge!

Petunia was ready and waiting, when Porky ran up to her front door a few minutes later. Carrying their fishing poles and a picnic basket, they hurried to the wharf.

The big fishing barge was tied at the end of the dock, but there was no one on it.

"We're awful early!" Petunia exclaimed. "The fishing boat won't start for an hour!"

"W-Well, it's b-better t-to b-be early than l-late!" Porky reminded her. "The f-fishing b-barge d-doesn't wait f-for anybody!"

"Let's sit here till it's time to go," Petunia suggested. She dropped down on the edge of the dock and dangled her feet above the water.

"O-Okay!" Porky agreed and sat down beside her. He gazed proudly at his fishing pole, which he had made from a long, strong willow branch. He looked admiringly at the three stout hooks, which he had bent from heavy wire.

"Porky! Look at that beeyootiful boat!" Petunia squealed suddenly, pointing across the gray-blue water of the harbor.

Porky looked. His eyes grew big and wide with wonder. Gliding into the harbor was the biggest, whitest, sleekest yacht he had ever seen. Bright-colored pennants fluttered from the topmast. The brass work glittered in the sunlight.

"Whewww!" Porky whistled. "That s-sure is a s-swell b-boat! I w-wish w-we c-could g-go fishin' on a b-boat l-like that!"

"So do I," Petunia sighed wistfully.

The beautiful boat was so close that they could see men moving around on its spotless, gleaming decks. They watched with wide-eyed admiration until a shrill, sharp whistle sounded from the fishing barge.

"C-C'mon, P-Petunia!" Porky called, jumping to his feet. "The f-fishing b-barge is r-ready to l-leave!"

They gathered their poles and the picnic basket and rushed down the wharf.

Suddenly they stopped and looked at each other, startled.

"I h-heard s-somebody c-calling f-for h-help!" Porky exclaimed.

"So did I!" Petunia nodded.

They listened. Again they heard the cry. It was weaker now and it was coming from below the edge of the dock.

They leaned over the edge and saw a small figure, dressed in a sailor suit, floundering about in the water.

"Save me!" a little voice shouted to them. "I can't swim very well!"

"It's a little boy!" Petunia cried.

Quickly Porky fastened his strongest hook onto his long pole. Then he dropped the hook directly over the struggling little body. The hook caught in the collar of the sailor suit and Porky pulled the boy through the water to the edge of the dock. He and Petunia lifted the youngster up on the dry planks, where he lay gasping and sobbing.

"You're safe now," Petunia crooned, patting the quivering boy.

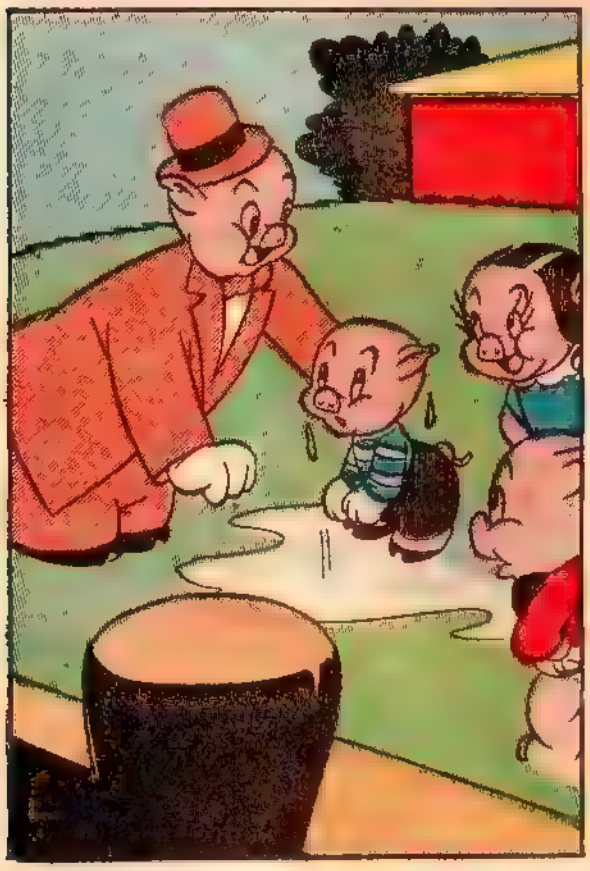
Just then the fishing barge gave one last final whistle and moved away from the dock into the harbor.

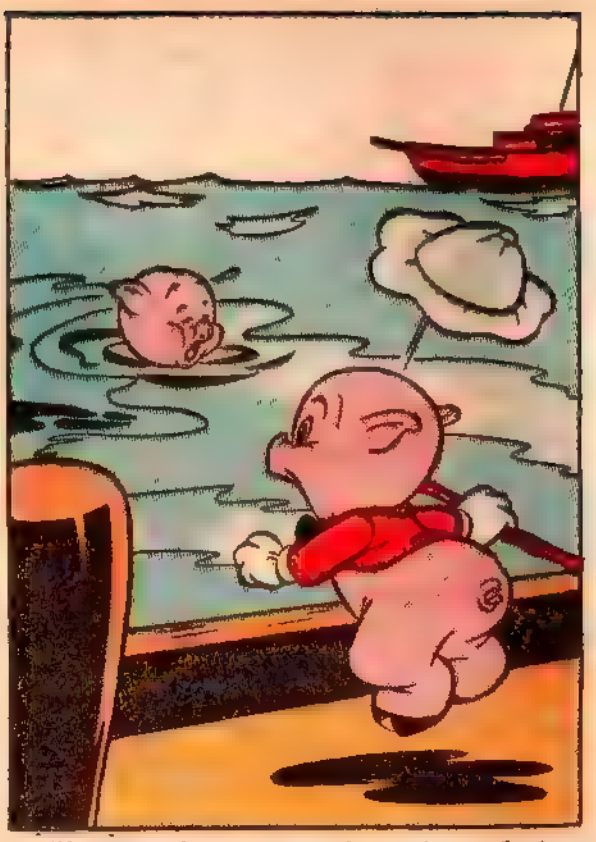
"The boat's gone! We can never catch it now!" Petunia cried in dismay.

"We c-can g-go f-fishing s-some other day!" Porky gulped. "N-Now we'd b-better t-take t-this l-little f-fella home!"

Porky and Petunia were lifting the little boy to his feet when a shadow fell across them. They looked up to see a pale-faced man with anxious eyes.

"There you are!" the man cried, wild relief in his voice. "I've been looking all over for you. What happened?"





"I was playing at the edge of the dock, waiting for you, Daddy, and I fell in," the little boy explained. "They saved me." He pointed to Porky and Petunia.

"I'm Phineas Pig and this is my son, Peter," the man said, smiling at Porky and Petunia. "I can't ever thank you for what you've done . . ."

"They missed the fishing barge, because they rescued me," little Peter cried eagerly. "Can't we take them with us?"

"Of course, we can!" Mister Pig nodded.

Then, as Porky and Petunia watched with amazed eyes, he signaled the beautiful, white yacht. A little boat sped across the water toward them.

"Climb in," Mister Pig invited, when the little boat stopped at the dock. "You can fish from my yacht."

"Your yacht!" Porky and Petunia gasped in surprise.

"Yes. Peter and I were going for a cruise. We'd like to have you go with us," Mister Pig smiled.

So Porky and Petunia went deep-sea fishing, after all.
